If ARCHEGOS had significant positions at other dealers and were already in the names that they were representing to be new names they were taking on with Goldman, this would have mattered and would have been very significant for LOCASTO and Goldman to know. There are Section 16 rules for considerations around disclosures in regards to ownership thresholds, so it would have been important for LOCASTO to know about ARCHEGOS's holdings for escalation purposes to raise to Goldman's legal team. There is a general guideline that at approximately 5% ownership of a company's stock, there has to be a representation that clients sign that they will fulfill their filing obligations. The rule is approximately 10% for U.S. issued companies.
